Me as a Peer Responder

Introduction
After carefully reviewing my response style given to others, I have determined that I am both an encouraging and personal peer responder, and that I also attempt to connect with my readers by clarifying examples and ideas to them.

Main Reason 1
I give a sense of personal connection with my readers through my use of I-statements.

Facts or Examples
1. "I felt your personal conflict when describing the whole ordeal."
2. "I completely agree with you Tristan on the issue of violence."
3. "I do believe that this is a problem on campus that needs to be addressed though."

Main Reason 2
I tend to give a lot of praise to those that I am peer reviewing to let them know what they are doing right.

Facts or Examples
1. "You appear to have a very well developed writing style."
2. "I like how you explain how ordinary the situation was before everything happened."
3. "I really enjoyed viewing your project. I think you have an excellent idea in place."

Main Reason 3
I often tend to clarify my ideas and viewpoints in making responses to my peers.

Facts or Examples
1. "Research is very important to writing a strong paper and gathering your resources."
2. "If there's one thing that I've learned... it is... there's multiple ways to get involved."
3. "That isn't fair to the individuals and there is no correct way of judging someone in that context."

Conclusion
Upon reviewing the frequency of certain types of responses, I now understand that I have developed a unique style of both praise, personal connection, and clarification when responding to my peers. By applying all three of these techniques to my responses, I am able to successfully give valid and helpful insight through responding to my peers.
